How did the pigs use boxer's death? Why does Boxer say I will work harder? What is wrong with boxers hoof? How does Animal Farm End? Who do the pigs represent in Animal Farm? Who does Muriel represent in Animal Farm? Boxer Animal Farm is a workhorse in the book, 'Animal Farm'. He is the farm's strongest, most committed and loyal laborer. He is very loving towards the other animals and watches out for them. He has several mottos right through from the beginning of the story that represents his character, such as: "I will work harder." and "Napoleon is always right." This shows that he is naive and rarely suspects anything. Boxer is also quite dumb and can only remember four letters of the alphabet at any time. Who Does Boxer Represent In Animal Farm He is a loyal supporter of Napoleon, listening to everything the so-called leader of the farm says and assumes, mostly without doubt, that everything Napoleon tells the farm animals is true and beneficial, highlighting his motto: "Napoleon is always right." In the story, when Boxer thought he had killed a stable-lad, he remorsefully said: "I have no wish to take life, not even human life," Even though the pigs stated that all the humans were bad, Boxer was sad when one of the farmers got injured in the battle. Boxer Animal Farm Quotes This shows that the pigs made all the decisions and that the animals did not always believe what the pigs wanted them to believe. This is allegorical because many of the Working Class men treated the Bolsheviks as the ultimate leader and thought that they were right all the time, so they did not have to think for themselves, just like how Boxer followed the pigs' words even though he felt a different way. Shortly after the expulsion of Snowball, Boxer said this: "If Comrade Napoleon says it, it must be right. This is allegorical as Boxer is meant to stand for the Russian proletariat, the powerful but often simple-minded working class. They are naturally drawn to Stalin like how Boxer is to Napoleon, because it seems like they will benefit the most from their new system instead of the old one. After the first mass executions carried out by Napoleon, Boxer broke the silence by saying: "I do not understand it. I would not have believed that such things could happen on our farm. It must be due to some fault in ourselves. The solution, as I see it, is to work harder. This is allegorical because before the Russian Revolution, the working classes were very naive and believed that Russia will get out of this terrible shortage of food and money. And with this new idea of communism, the working class of Russia felt as if they had to work harder, not asking any question and try to continue and better the life after the rebellion. Boxer felt the same way too. The writer, Orwell, needed to talk about Boxer because he wanted the world to realize that they have to think for themselves, and not blindly submit to their authorities. Orwell once served in the Imperial Police in Burma. From there, he could see that the people were oppressed: "... increased my natural hatred of authority and made me for the first aware of the existence of the working class." He also talked about Boxer because he wanted to show the people of the world how they could be lied to by the media and just believed it. When something goes wrong, Orwell wanted the people to spend some time to think about the situation, and not just plainly working harder to beat the stress. Orwell finally wants to say that the working class is a force, and if that force rebels against the authorities, they might have a chance of winning. Boxer is a character from the book Animal Farm by George Orwell. He is a horse, and is nearly eighteen hands high. In the book he is as strong as two horses put together. He has a white stripe down his nose, and that gives him a strange appearance. But still he was respected for his great power in work and his good character. He works as a cart-horse, as does Clover. Benjamin likes him in secret. In the book Boxer falls into the quarry when he was pulling a cart full of rock and is sent to a veterinarian on another farm by Napoleon. Squealer, Napoleon's spokesman, then claims he died peacefully, but Benjamin realises he has actually gone to the knacker's (slang for slaughterhouse, where animals are killed). Boxer was the most hard-working animal in the farm and was respected by all. When Boxer tried to support Snowball against Squealer, Napoleon tries to attack Boxer with his dogs but Boxer easily crushes the dog. Boxer is an ideal character showing loyalty along with his great hard work. His slogans are: "I will always work harder." "Napoleon's always right." He is a very loyal, caring character, but kind of thick and does not see the real truth behind situations. Boxer represents the loyal communist working class. Him being slaughtered represents Stalin getting rid of the workers that are too old or too ill to participate in labour. The windmill represents them building the Industries and Boxer getting up early represents the working class working extremely hard. His gullibility represents the working class being gullible and doing what there told for promises in the future. His slogan "I will work harder" represents the working class's belief in Communism. "Napoleon is always right" represents their trust in the political system. Boxer (Animal Farm) Facts for Kids.
