The authors used monthly death records from the Puerto Rico Vital Statistics system from 2010 to 2016. One was a nice post discussing the challenges for AI in medicine by Luke Oakden-Rayder and the other was about the need for increased focus on basic research in AI motivated by AlphaGo by Tim Harford. Despite the excitement around AI and the exciting results we see from sophisticated research teams almost daily - the actual extent and application of AI is much smaller. I was listening to the Efort Report Episode on The Messy Execution of Reproducible Research where they were discussing the piece about Amy Cuddy in the New York Times. I think both the article and the podcast did a good job of discussing the nuances of the importance of reproducibility and the challenges of the social interactions around this topic. Sometimes, when I write a really long blog post, I forget what the point was at the end. I suppose I could just update the previous postbut that feels wrong for some reason. I meant to make one final point in my last post about how better data analyses help you reason about the data. In particular, I meant to tie together the discussion about garbage collection to the section on data analysis. I just got back from the rOpenSci OzUnconf that was run in Melbourne last week. These events are always a great opportunity to meet people just getting started in the R community and to get them involved. As is typical for these conferences, topic ideas were pitched via issues on the OzUnconf GitHub repo. The gist of Face ID is that it recognizes your face using a mathematical representation and then unlocks the phone when it can confirm that it is you. When we teach the class an exploratory graph is the kind of graph you make for yourself just to try to understand a data set. An expository graph is one where you are trying to communicate information to someone else. Communication Both of my podcasts have a co-host who is not in the same physical location as me. Therefore, we need to use some sort of Internet-based communication software (Skype, Google Hangouts, FaceTime, etc. A lot of it was YouTube videos of advanced editing or very basic stuff. From the daily routines in our homes to the business of making the greatest cities run, the effects of statistics are everywhere. What is statistical analysis. For example:Look around you.Cal fire map bay areaFrom the tube of toothpaste in your bathroom to the planes flying overhead, you see hundreds of products and processes every day that have been improved through the use of statistics. Affordable storage, powerful computers and advanced algorithms have all led to an increased use of computational statistics.Intoxicacion por comida medicamentoBut why is there so much talk about careers in statistical analysis and data science. It could be the shortage of trained analytical thinkers. Or it could be the demand for managing the latest big data strains. Or applying statistics to win more games of Axis and Allies. It is often these early passions that lead statisticians into the field. As adults, those passions can carry over into the workforce as a love of analysis and reasoning, where their passions are applied to everything from the influence of friends on purchase decisions to the study of endangered species around the world.
