Image: Sean Gladwell / Moment / Getty Images As a people, we can't help but fall in love with geography even when we don't realize it. At the Olympics you instinctively want Team USA to win, even if it's a sport you've never even heard of before. If a team from your state makes it to the World Series, you feel like you're a part of the win even if you barely follow baseball. That's your, that's "your" team. All because you came from the same place. Who we are and where we are is always linked. And for good reason, too! You're shaped by where you're from. The South makes a person a Southerner in more than just name. it's in the way you talk, the way you relate to both family and strangers. It's the way you like your BBQ cooked! The north is only different in how each of those things is expressed there. But they're just as relevant and just as important. So whether or not you have any kind of drawl, whether you prefer a white gravy or a rich brown one, whether you serve your ribs with a vinegar-based sauce or a ketchup-based one, whether you dream of a White Christmas or live one every year, it's time to find out if you're a true Southerner or you belong in the North! Take the quiz and see! One of the first methods used was the Mason-Dixon Line, but that was created a century before the Civil War, and cities like Washington, D.C. (the Union capital) are in the South according to the line. Some people use the Ohio River, the Potomac River or U.S. Route 40 to split the country. If you wanted to use religion or dialect, those could work, but what may be the most accurate line to separate the country is the Sweet Tea Line created by McDonald's in 2004. The Sweet Tea Line doesn't split the country in half physically but socially. It's simple. Northerners prefer hot tea any time of the year, and when it's iced, it's unsweetened. Southerners prefer iced tea at any time of the year, and it's always sweetened. This is based on sales from the largest fast-food chain in the world, and you'd be hard-pressed to find a northerner or a southerner who disagreed. With that being said, the easiest way to split the country is using the geographic center of the continental United States, which is the border of Kansas and Nebraska. It splits California into a northern state and a southern state, and if you look at the 1860 presidential election results, this would be accurate politically as well. Abraham Lincoln got killed in Los Angeles County but won the state. Today California is probably the most liberal state in the country, but that wasn't always the case. Take a look at these landmarks and tell us whether they're in the North or the South.
